

Indianapolis entertainers have done many original and novel things, in the course of time, for their guests. They have run the gauntles of cards, socials, teas, receptions, dinners, breakfasts, weddings, picnics, kettledrums and a dozen others, and they have, in the course of their desires, planned and carried out as many pretty and curious devices as women of any other city. In fact, the women of this city have a reputation for getting up the most attractive affairs imaginable. Of course, Indianapolitans feel, and rightfully, that there is no city which has as many handsome women nor as many with an equal amount of good sense and good taste. Strangers remark upon the many pretty girls, but those who live here have become so accustomed to the number that they have grown somewhat neglectful about speaking of them. The state of beauty and the charm of hospitality which every one experiences here are proverbial. And in connection with these the kind of entertainments which are given belong. The desire to have something new has rarely led the women into what might be called folly. A recent visitor to the city was speaking of the place in which she had lived, and gave an interesting account of one season's diversion which the women there indulged in. A popular minister in one of the fashionable churches was a widower and after a num ber of years he decided to take unto himself a wife. Now he did not choose one of his own flock to be his better half but he went to a neighboring city and won for his wife a woman of suitable age who had visited friends in the city where he lived. Of the courtship and marriage there was nothing in particular to tell. After the wedding, and the bride had been welcomed and duly installed as mistress of the parsonage she began to have ideas. One of these and the one most important to herself was that wanted to be a leader in the circles of the city. Neither nor herself were rich enough for her to go by the road to wealth, and she could not take the palm from any of the members af the old families. All at once about fifty ladies were surprised one day to receive an invitation to attend a Bible reading at the home of one of the wealthiest and most influential ladies in the city. The hour was 10 o'clock-Among those who received an invitation was the visitor in this city, and she went, just as everyone else who was asked did-She was ushered into the handsome drawing room, and by 10 o'clock she found herself one of a half hundred ex-pectant ladies. The minister's wife appectant ladies. The minister's wife appeared in a short time with her Bible, she read a chapter, and then taking one verse she expounded it for about an hour, and then the company was dismissed. There was a great deal of talk as the ladies separated, and many and various were the expressions. Of course, being the minister's wife, whenever she asked the use of the drawing room of any member no one could well refuse, even if they had desired to do so. No one did refuse, and she kept up the readings until some dissenter concluded that she had could well refuse, even if they had desired to do so. No one did refuse, and she kept up the readings until some dissenter concluded that she had all the preaching she wanted from that family on Sunday mornings and evenings, and she for one did not intend to go to another reading. The gatherings continued all winter and she was the one most talked about and was consequently popular and happy. The Bible-reading entertainments of that winter have always been referred to as one of the most unique kinds of entertainments the ladies of that city ever had. Probably it did not do them any great in-Probably it did not do them any great injury, but as invitations were sent and the drawing rooms were the scene of action, it was always classed in the list of entertain-
